UK Outlook for Wednesday 27 Jan 2021 to Friday 5 Feb 2021:

Unsettled conditions look likely to dominate for this period, with low pressure across the UK. This should bring changeable weather to most of the country, with periods of rain, showers, and strong winds at times. While westerly and southwesterly winds are expected to be dominant for most of the period, occasional northerly winds are possible, bringing a chance of snowfall, likely confined to the far north. Milder conditions in general may start to spread across most of the UK at points during most of this period. Towards the end of the period, we may see high pressure bringing a higher than average chance of cold weather with wintry outbreaks. However, there is a chance of drier than average conditions, which would bring increased frost and fog risks.
